銅鑲金三面六臂馬頭金剛明王護法神, 西藏, 14 – 15世紀

In Tibetan Buddhism, Hayagriva (“having the neck of a horse”, “馬頭金剛明王護法”) is an important deity who originated as a yaksha attendant of Avalokiteśvara. Known as dharmapala, means “Dharma protector or defender”. Practice in all schools of Tibetan Buddhism, and was widely promoted by Buddhist Bengali religious leader and master, Atīśa Dīpaṅkara Śrījñāna.

The King of Wrath, Hayagriva with three faces, six hands, with faces possesses three glaring eyes, mustache, eyebrows, and hair. With skulls as a crown, the four right legs are bent and the four left extended – treading on the form of the eight great nagas.
